New Entertainment

The Roaring Twenties was an age of new entertainment. In the 1920s, there was much more leisure time for people and higher wages which allowed people to find new forms of entertainment. New technology was being produced which led to new forms of entertainment as well. The era of the Roaring Twenties was advertised to be a carefree time and a time where people could have fun. Professional sports became immensely popular in the 1920s like baseball and Babe Ruth. There were many new types of entertainment that helped shape the idea of living a stress free life.

In the 1920s, there were new types of media produced such as magazines and news broadcasting systems. Time became a popular magazine and that was made in 1923. The first movies with sound were created called "talkies", and many people were hooked to them. NBC was founded along with CBS in the 1920s which spread news across America fast. With all of these new forms of entertainment, the attitude of the Roaring Twenties was prominent of living a carefree life and new inventions making people prosper.

One form of entertainment of the 1920s was when Charles Lindbergh, nicknamed "Lucky Lindy" flew across the Atlantic Ocean. He flew across the Atlantic on May 20, 1927. Charles was the first man to ever fly across the Atlantic Ocean which was a huge success for the United States. He was also considered to be one of the heroes of the decade because he made history for America, and people were ecstatic that he successfully flew across the Atlantic.
